授業の目的 【日本語】 Goals of the Course(JPN)
授業の目的 【英語】 Goals of the Course	As the world becomes increasingly globalized and interconnected, international movements of people have likewise increased. This course aims to introduce migration studies as a subfield of political science (although it can sometimes overlap with sociology), providing a brief history of migration in the modern world, an overview of what current migratory patterns look like, and a discussion of current problems nations face in terms of international migration. Given that many international students at Nagoya University likely have some immigration experience, a deeper understanding of international migration patterns can be enlightening.
到達目標 【日本語】 Objectives of the Course(JPN)
到達目標 【英語】 Objectives of the Course	Stemming from comparative politics, this course aims give students a broad understanding of international migration and its surrounding issues. We will discuss migration theory, review the history of modern migration movements, and focus on the migration issues affecting several different regions.
